Second International Symposium on the Law of Remedies Advancing the Common Law of Remedies: Praxis and Pedagogy throughout the Commonwealth 16 November 2007

- New Zealand, Canadian and Australian common law has traditionally been influenced by developments in the United Kingdom, and to a lesser extent, legal developments of that other great common law bastion, the United States of America. That picture has changed significantly over the last two decades as the legal practices of these Commonwealth countries has matured. There is now significant inter-connectivity between these nations which has generated much legal discourse.
- Traditional legal discourse focuses upon rights, primarily aimed at creating a cohesive normative structure embodied in the rule of law. The law of remedies deals with the practical actualization of rights; in turn, often shaping the content of the normative rights being asserted.
- This Remedies Symposium is designed to explore the intersection of remedies and rights in domestic legal systems, but its frame of reference is distinctly trans-national. It asks whether it is now appropriate to speak of a new understanding of the common law. A common law that traces its historical roots back to Anglo legal traditions, but which builds upon shared political and social beliefs, and the mutual respect to be accorded the jurisprudence of all mature Commonwealth legal systems.
- This Symposium will appeal to lawyers, academics, judges, and policy makers who wish to delve more deeply into how remedial issues shape rights, and to those desiring to understand emerging remedial issues across Commonwealth jurisdictions.
- Leading specialists from Australia, Canada, New Zealand, the United Kingdom and the United States of America, have been invited to write and contribute to one of the five themes outlined on the "Conference Details" webpage. These papers will be made available to registrants prior to the conference, the aim being to allow a dialogue and discussion between panelists and registrants.

The Journal of Law, Information and Science
General Issue: Volume 25 no. 1 & no. 2

- It is being relaunched as a journal specialising not only in information technology and law, but also the broader field of the relationship between law and science, including but not limited to law and genetics and law and biotechnology.
- So the focus on IT is not lost, the journal will have two editorial boards, one specialising in law and IT, the other focussed on law and science.
- The relaunched journal is now accepting articles, papers and reviews for publication in one or if possible two issues.
- Submissions are due by the end of the year.
- Contributions may be submitted as email attachments to the editor, Michael Stokes, at the Law School, University of Tasmania, (Michael.Stokes@utas.edu.au)

Professional Development

Graduate Certificate in Education (Higher Education) for University staff and PhD students

For more than ten years the School of Education has run a successful professional development program for university teachers. In 2007, the program will consist of four 2-unit courses, taken part-time over one or two years. It includes study modules on curriculum design, student learning, teaching methods, using information and communication technologies, student assessment, and evaluation of teaching and courses. Participants conduct a project designed to enhance their own teaching. Many participants have subsequently won teaching awards and become leaders in curriculum and assessment change in their Schools and the University. The program is supported by the UQ Staff Development Committee which currently provides a half-bursary to UQ Staff to offset the full fee of $5,120 in 2007. The other half of the fee is usually covered by the staff member's school or faculty. For Australian PhD students enrolled at UQ, participation in the program has been encouraged by the Dean of Postgraduate Studies, whose approval is needed if the program is taken in conjunction with postgraduate research. A HECS fee is also applicable. In 2007, the University's fee calculator indicates the HECS fee is $399.20 for each 2-unit course up-front or $499.00 deferred. For international students, the fee is $2,060.00 per 2-unit course.

Applications

Applications are now being sought for 2007. An application form and additional details can be found at:

Media Awareness Training UQ TEDI

- Media awareness training introduces senior UQ academics and general staff and PhD students to the media. It explains how the media operates, what journalists expect and how the University can develop good relationships with the media.
- It provides participants with the opportunity to practise skills necessary for media interviews.
- This course will enable participants to:
 1. Understand how the media operates;
 2. Frame their communications and messages to maximise positive interactions with the media.
